ABOUT

Lauren Rosa Miller knows what it means to come from something. A 5th generation entrepreneur from a lineage of landowners and farmers spanning nearly 150 years — including Miller Farms, one of the largest Black-owned farms in the Southeast — Lauren grew up understanding that legacy is not something you plan for later. It is something you live right now.

She has spoken at family reunions where her words landed like a sermon — because for many families, the reunion IS the legacy work. The gathering, the storytelling, the passing down of names and histories and recipes and land — that is the institution. Lauren helps families see what they already have, name it, and protect it before it disappears between generations.

When her father, D.J. Miller, became ill, Lauren walked through the experience that most families face in crisis — trying to capture decades of knowledge, preserve stories that had never been written down, and hold a family together while grief and logistics competed for space. Her tribute to him went viral with 3M+ views, earning national coverage on Good Morning America, ABC News, and NewsNation — because it touched something universal. We all have a D.J. Miller in our family. And most of us wait too long.

Today Lauren carries that experience — and the 150-year legacy of her family's stewardship — into rooms where families are ready to stop living their legacy by accident and start building it on purpose.

FULL CIRCLE

"While going through storage, I found an old program. My father was the keynote speaker at a family reunion — talking about our family, our history, our legacy. He didn't make it his life's work. But what I'm building now was already validated in his lifetime. I just didn't know it yet."

SPEAKING TOPICS

- 01WE ARE ALREADY RICH: RECLAIMING THE LEGACY YOU DIDN'T KNOW YOU HAD

Most of us have been taught that legacy belongs to wealthy people. Lauren dismantles that myth — showing families that the land, the stories, the recipes, the relationships, the names they carry are wealth. And that wealth is at risk every time a generation passes without naming it.
- 02THE FAMILY REUNION IS THE INSTITUTION: MAKING THE GATHERING COUNT

The family reunion is not just a party — it is the single most powerful legacy tool most Black families already have. Lauren shows families how to turn their gatherings into intentional acts of preservation, governance, and transfer.
- 03KNOW WHERE YOU COME FROM: HOW YOUR LINEAGE BECOMES YOUR POWER

Understanding your family history builds identity, confidence, and the clarity to make decisions with authority. Lauren shows why the most grounded people are the ones who know exactly where they come from.
- 04DON'T WAIT UNTIL SOMEONE GETS SICK: STARTING THE CONVERSATIONS THAT MATTER MOST

Told from the most personal angle — Lauren shares what it looks like when a family is forced into legacy conversations by crisis, and gives audiences the permission and the tools to start before urgency takes away their choices.
